Holidays and Special Days – What Can I Do? -- Special days and holidays, particularly those in November, December, and January can be very challenging for bereaved parents. Come and listen to other bereaved parents, who will offer suggestions for preparing for and dealing with the holidays and other special days.

Sharing groups – a key part of each Chapter meeting – will be held as usual for first-time attendees, and the newly and non-newly bereaved.

Calvary United Methodist Church
301 Rowe Boulevard
Annapolis, MD 21401

Meetings are held on the first Thursday of every month and are open to anyone grieving the death of a child. Come around to the back of the church—there is parking and an entrance directly into our meeting room.

We are a self-help support organization dedicated to assisting parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles and siblings toward the positive resolution of grief following the death of a child. We provide information and education to extended family and friends. Our greatest strength as bereaved families is the unity we find in shared experiences which can lead us out of isolation, give us a place to “belong,” and offer us hope that together – we can make it.

WHAT TO EXPECT AT OUR CHAPTER MEETINGS

Our Chapter gathers one evening a month to address topics and offer support to those who are mourning the death of a child. Our meetings last for approximately 2 hours. Sometimes we schedule a 30-minute presentation at the beginning of our meeting. When the speaker or panel has concluded the presentation, we introduce ourselves and say our child's name. We then take a short break before dividing into sharing groups.

Sharing groups are facilitated by fellow Chapter members and are completely confidential. During this time, the issues that are discussed—particularly for the newly bereaved—focus on the issues facing participants today.

Two Experiences with Halloween

Halloween used to be one of my favorite holidays. I enjoyed creating costumes for my family so much that, as we went out to "Trick or Treat," I was already coming up with ideas for the following year. My photo albums show happy pictures of my sons over the years, dressed up as an American Indian and as the court jester; as an Army soldier and Air Force captain; as Wolfman and Telletubby. From sorting (and tasting) the candy to putting up the decorations, I always had as much fun as my children did. But after my younger son died, I felt very differently.

Decorations that used to seem clever and even comical at times, now made me look away. The coffins, the RIP tombstones, skeletons, ghosts – the morbid images suddenly seemed too dark and ghastly. We had already experienced true horror when we lost our cherished son and brother. In our first year, I think I stayed in bed that night (I can't even remember), leaving candy out in a bowl to avoid hearing the doorbell ring – and then seeing the faces of children who would be happily asking for treats. Now, a few years down the road, I am comforted to see our older son having a laugh as he dresses up with his buddies. I am ready to hear the bell ring and see the little children in their precious costumes. But while I've learned to accept Halloween again, and what it means to the rest of the neighborhood, for me October 31 has lost its magic.

As a bereaved parent, I've learned that masks are not exclusively reserved for Halloween. When the initial shock of my son's death abated, and I felt ready to go out and face the world again, I learned to put on the mask of the functioning adult and parent of my surviving son. The passing stranger asks, "How are you?" and I wonder if they would really want to know. Well, I've learned to live with giving the socially graceful response ("I'm fine") and continuing on my way. Facing new situations and unknowing people, I'm faced with the inevitable question, "How many children do you have?" Are they prepared to hear what I want to say? "I have two sons. My older son turned 14 and started high school this year. And the younger one would be turning 10 this month, but he died in 2003."

Sometimes I can say it. Sometimes I need my mask.

If Roses Grow in Heaven

If roses grow in heaven, Lord, pick a bunch for me.
Place them in my son's arms and tell him they're from me.
Tell him that I love and miss him, and when he turns to smile,
Place a kiss upon his cheek and hold him for awhile.
Remembering him is easy, I do it every day.
There's an ache within my heart...
That will never go away.

— Author Unknown

There is an ancient Egyptian story that says that when God created the world, He made everything so small so that it could grow up with time. The grain into wheat, the baby into a man, the bud into a flower. Only sorrow was created fully grown so that it might decrease with time and man might be able to live with it.

I do not ask that you forget your dear departed. I want you to remember. I only ask that you remember more than the moment of death, more than the funeral, more than the house of mourning. Remember life! Remember the whole, not the final page.

— Rabbi Maurice Davis, Baltimore

Getting on with Life – What Does It Mean?

Of all the statements and spiritual platitudes quoted to me since my son, Daniel's, death, the phrase that I hear most frequently makes me squirm the most. "You have got to get on with your life." Recently, I quit squirming long enough to ponder the meaning behind this phrase that is usually said to the bereaved in the form of a command. Exactly what does this phrase mean? What are people implying when they say it?

I was pregnant when Daniel died and three months later, I gave birth to a baby girl. Wasn't that getting on with my life? I nurtured my three children, took them to school, the park and birthday parties. Now wasn't that going on with my life? I even cooked dinner four times a week!

At first after Daniel's death, I would have liked to have had my life literally stopped and been buried next to my son, but I kept existing. Like the plastic bag tossed about by the wind, I was fluttering, being carried by the events of life. Seasons came and went. In the spring, I planted marigolds and tomato vines. In the autumn I jumped in fallen leaves with my children. I continued and I am still continuing to live.

Now, I may be bereaved, but I am by no means a fool! As I ponder the meaning behind "getting on with life," I am capable of knowing exactly what those who say this have in mind. "Forget about your dead child. Quit grieving. You make me uncomfortable." Getting on with life means don't acknowledge August 25th, Daniel's birthday, anymore. Forget how he slid down the snowy bank in the recycle bin, put sand in the van and ate gummy bears. Forget he had cancer, suffered and died at only age four. Don't see the empty chair at the dinner table; don't cry, just live!!!

Some who are more religious would like to believe that a bereaved parent can claim, "My child is safe and happy in Heaven. Therefore, why should I yearn for him?" Perhaps, I pose a threat to certain types because I let it be known I question God. I weep, I have been angry. I miss Daniel. Many old friends feel if they hang around me too long I might convince them that a few of their illusions about life are just that, only illusions. As my cries of anguish are heard, there are those who can only think how to make me quiet. To stop my heartfelt feelings, they say quite sternly, "You must get on with your life."

I am living. I do move on with life with Daniel in my mind and in my heart. Although he is not physically here as I continue to live, I continue to love. To sever his memory totally from my life would be creating destruction and damage that would ruin me. To push Daniel out of my life and not be able to freely mention his name or write and speak about who he was on earth would only bring more pain to my life. I'd shrivel up. Comfort for me comes in remembering with smiles how he drew with a blue marker on his sister's wall, ran outside naked and picked green tomatoes. For the reality is getting on with life and that means continuing to cherish Daniel.

— Alice Wisler

From a Grandmother's Viewpoint

Death was not something I thought about when my grandchildren were born. Thirteen months after our fifth grandchild came into this world, I was standing in the snow, holding my daughter's arm, and looking down at a tiny white box containing him.

The grief came in waves, sometimes bearable, sometimes not. As well as dealing with the loss and watching my daughter, her husband, and two sons grieve, I felt helpless to ease their pain. When you lose a grandchild, you also lose the people that your daughter and her family were. They no longer look at life the same. They change. Grief does that – it changes the entire family and all those that the family touches.

Unless one has lost a child or grandchild, you cannot even imagine what life is like in this grieving process. It has been six years since Kyle died. We are still healing, yet we have come a long way. We are stronger and closer for having come this far. We will never forget this child.

— Kyle's Grandmother, TCF, Central Connecticut

SIBLING PAGE

Because

Because you can't feel me...doesn't mean I'm not there.
 Because you can't see me...doesn't mean I'm not near.
 Because you can't hear me...doesn't mean I don't speak.
 Because you can't see me...doesn't mean I'm out of reach.
 Because I'm dead...doesn't mean I'm gone.

Table for Four

We walked slowly,
 Cautiously into the musky, dim room.
 We had put on our Saturday best to eat steak,
 And take our minds off of the harsh reality of our new lives.
 In a daze, we almost ran into the hostess desk.
 She smiled, "A table for how many?"
 The question lingered in the air,
 On our minds,
 The words turning our stomachs.
 We shifted uncomfortably, waiting for one of us
 To answer the heart-stopping question.
 My father's voice boomed as though he had no control.
 "We're 4."
 The number made me shudder,
 As hot tears burned behind my eyes.
 My mother's face had turned red.
 Tears rolled down her cheeks uncontrollably.
 My brother stood in silence,
 Eyes glazed over in a coma.
 My brain told me NO,
 For I did not want to be here,
 But my legs told me YES.
 My first steps were uneasy
 As though the ground had become soft.
 Together we solemnly walked
 To the table of our new life.

—Lauren Alperstein, in memory of her younger brother and best friend Ethan

A Sibling Speaks Out

What happens to the children when a brother or sister dies? In some ways it is a very different experience from that which parents go through, while in others it is very much the same. Part of the reason for the difference is that the child who has died has a unique relationship with each family member. Part of the reason for the similarity is that all have suffered a loss.

One of the strongest desires expressed by siblings is that they are much more likely to want to return to a normal routine. They want to return to school fairly quickly, and to go out with their friends. They want their parents to stop crying, not because they don't care, but because they do care and want to see the hurt stop. Just because a child wants to go to a movie doesn't mean he isn't grieving. Children are much less concerned with socially "appropriate" behavior after someone has died, and may do things that do not fit into an "appropriate" role.

Another strong feeling I see is guilt. As much as parents know about their children, there are some things they will never know. A child's private thoughts or an exchange between children may never come to the parents' attention. The source of a child's guilt is frequently the result of an argument, a hastily shouted "drop dead," or similar fleeting thought. These incidents come back to haunt children, as though one such incident had something to do with the death.

There are a few more concerns that may develop. One is how to take over for the dead child; for example, the household chores that were always done by him or her, but that now have to be done by someone else. Related to this concern is a situation in which a child always shared a particular activity simply because the sibling did it, too. After the death, the surviving sibling may feel compelled to continue the activity because to give it up would be to take away a reminder of the dead sibling. Another concern is that whatever happened to the brother or sister may happen to the survivor. This is particularly acute if the sibling who died was older. As the child approaches the age of the sibling when he or she died, a feeling of anxiety may develop. Many children realize this fear to be groundless, but find themselves wondering if they will survive. Consequently, birthdays are often occasions with unexpressed conflicts.

Children share some of their parents' feelings: loneliness, looking for comfort, the feeling that no one else really knows what they're going through. They also share the unanswerable questions: "If I could have..." and "What if...?"

A child's life is changed forever when a brother or sister dies. If I could advise parents, it would be to say: "Children do not grieve the same way as parents do because relationships differ. Keeping these differences in perspective will help you understand why children sometimes do the things they do. It helps to consider a child's point of view when you are hurting so much. During such an emotionally draining time as grieving, don't leave anything to chance. Don't assume anything. Making sure you and your children are aware of each other's feelings will mean less confusion, less tension, more sharing, and more growing together as a family."

Cemetery Visits

Are you one of those people who have a need to go to the cemetery often? The non-bereaved frown on that as a rule. Many people feel there is something morbid about those visits; that you're obsessing. Unless you know the pain of losing someone you love better than yourself, you can't understand that need.

Some people need to visit every day; others go now and then; and still others never go back once the funeral is over. There are no rules. If it makes people uncomfortable when you make your cemetery visits, go alone. Don't feel you need to get anybody's permission or approval. Call a friend who won't judge you by the number of miles you travel to and fro.

It is important to understand that how often you go to the cemetery has absolutely nothing to do with the length and depth of your expression of grief. Do what comforts you, not what pleases others. Your needs should and must come first, especially right now. You won't always require visits this often, and when that happens, don't feel guilty. It means you are progressing. For right now, do what makes you feel better.

Parents, Would You Like to Share Your Story?

Chris Denhup, a master's prepared nurse, has contacted our Chapter. She is studying what it is like for parents after their child dies. She would like to talk with parents and learn from them so that she can help nurses to provide better care for mothers and fathers after the death of a child in the future.

She writes, "If your child died from cancer at least one year ago and was between 0 and 18 years at the time of his or her death, please contact me by email or telephone if you would like to learn more about volunteering to be a part of this study."

Ms. Denhup's contact information is as follows:
